The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers needs people with talent, ability, vision and dedication.

You can help.

And while rebuilding New Orleans, you can also build your career. Positions in New Orleans offer permanent Corps employees:

- opportunities for promotion and eligibility for higher-level positions throughout the Corps
- administrative return rights to your district
- and the challenge of a lifetime – a chance to make history, to create a region's future, and to be part of a team effort that is a testimony to the American spirit

Come to New Orleans and join our team working on one of the largest civil works projects in American history. I can't promise you fame or glory but I can guarantee you the satisfaction of being part of something bigger than yourself—of truly making a difference. We need you! Come on down and play a part in history! ESSAYONS!

Lt. Gen. Carl A. Strock
Commander and Chief of Engineers

The eyes of the nation continue to be on Corps rebuilding efforts in New Orleans and Southeast Louisiana. We have made the impossible possible in a short period of time. More challenges await us... we can't be successful without you. I have served with you in peace, war and during natural disaster...you are my credentials. Together we will get it done. Hooah!

Brig. Gen. Robert Crear
Commander, Mississippi Valley Division

Join the Corps in rebuilding the Big Easy

Shaping today, securing tomorrow

The Corps is rebuilding New Orleans.

The Big Easy, the Jewel of the South, the Crescent City — New Orleans is known by all these names and more.

One of the most beautiful and interesting places in America, renowned for its unique culture and cuisine, the greater New Orleans area is home to jazz, Mardi Gras and the French Quarter.

The region is rebounding after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita — and the Corps is working hard on its reconstruction program to help this area return to its traditional, fun, family-friendly way of life.

In one of the largest public works projects in American history, the Corps is restoring, repairing and improving the hurricane protection system of southeast Louisiana. The goal of this massive, multi-billion-dollar civil works program is to help protect this great city from destructive storms in the future.

The Corps is rebuilding the confidence of the region.

With each new flood-gate, pumping station, navigation structure and levee, the Corps demonstrates its commitment to improving the quality of human life and protecting this unique region of the United States.

And as the hurricane protection system is rebuilt, confidence is restored. To current and former residents and businesses, the city once more beckons with promise, opportunity, and the chance for renewed greatness.

The Corps is rebuilding the strength of America.

A center of trade and transportation and home to valuable oil and gas resources and infrastructure, New Orleans is strategically important to the United States.

By rebuilding the city's hurricane protection system, the Corps demonstrates America's recognition of New Orleans' importance.

By restoring the region's security, we embody the nation's will to pull together in the face of adversity.
